With the dance and club scenes in Eastern Europe now influencing daytime television and radio, and individual events attracting tens of thousands, it's a good time to herald Rulers Of The Deep, the territory's most successful dance outfit to date.

Destroying the bubblegum dance stereotype of the region, DJ Meri and P Julm have crafted a promising career with some exceptional deep house and techno, winning fans such as Josh Wink, Roger Sanchez and Sandy Rivera, and releasing on the likes of Ovum, Peppermint Jam, and NRK.

They've pulled off a Top 5 chart hit in their home country of Estonia with the single, 'Planet Drum', the pan-European smash that saw them nominated in the MTV Europe Awards. For anyone looking beyond the Nordic and Germanic countries for a sign of dance culture's growing dominance and evolution, Rulers Of The Deep are the ones taking centre stage.

'Untitled Secret', signed to Manchester Underground Music (MUM), is their new studio album. It continues their rich vein of deep, tech-edged house but this time shows Meri and P Julm moving into different areas, mining the underground for some more acidic moments and showing they can craft big anthems with the best of them.

'Track Three' is the energetic opener, giving way to 'Perfect Defamation' featuring Gaz Evans, one of the current biggies from their DJ set. 'Cut Off' sees ROTD in stripped down mode, letting the rhythms and percussion build into a hypnotic groove. Title track, 'Untitled Secret', is an intricately layered piece of modern techno, moving neatly into 'Look At What Acid Does To People', as funky as anything from the Motor City in the past three decades.

'Fettle' adds depth to the collection, an atmospheric slice of bleepy house with the most melodic, piano-filled moment of the 10 tracks. 'Teleport', meanwhile, is the tribal-influenced cut on the album, and a return to the club-based workouts they excel in. 'Look Inside', with a fine spoken word contribution from frequent collaborator, Pierre Ravan, is so deep it should come with a canary. 'Last Survivor 2009' picks up the pace before the big closer, 'Planet Drum', the crossover hit which suggests ROTD have the prowess to take them yet further onto the global stage.
